

EDITOR'S COMMENT

This is the third issue of Crescent University Law Journal. It contains ten papers dealing with subject matters such as Islamic jurisprudence, human rights, right of constituents to recall their representatives in the legislature, criminal and civil procedure, forensic evidence, renewable energy, accountability legislative framework for co-management of extractive resources in Africa, and copyrights. Indeed, it is a potpourri of sorts and it heralds our moving the journal online.

The journal is now available online. This is in accord with our efforts to ensure instant global reach as we release each issue of the journal. Past issues of the journal¹ have all been uploaded. Our target is full management of the journal online with submission of articles online and monitoring the processing of the paper through review and eventual acceptance for publishing, or otherwise.

We will continue to welcome and accommodate papers from all subject areas of law, including pedagogy, university management, information communication technology, legislative procedure, electoral process, local government, environment and public and development policies.

We are grateful to all the authors of the articles in this issue, the anonymous external assessors and paper reviewers who have demonstrated consistency in supporting us to ensure that we continue to improve our publication processes and the quality of the journal.

The views expressed in the journal are those of authors of the articles, and not necessarily those of the Editor-in-Chief, Editorial Committee, or the publisher.
